By JOHN REID BLACKWELL Richmond Times-Dispatch

Virginia's growing wine industry has lured a couple of retired Richmond-area professionals into a viniculture venture.

Last fall, Paul Kreckman, a longtime local real estate professional and retired vice president of Highwoods Properties, and Stan Joynes, a retired real estate lawyer and partner at LeClairRyan, acquired a farm in Albemarle County near Charlottesville with the idea of starting a vineyard.

This year, they planted four acres of grapes there, landscaped some of the property and renovated a farm building to serve as a wine-tasting room for visitors.

Their wives and three other couples have joined them as business partners in the venture, which they named Valley Road Vineyards.

"We have five couples — all still married even nine months into this adventure," Joynes quipped on Tuesday at a meeting of Encorepreneur, a local organization for baby boomers interested in creating new careers.

Kreckman and Joynes spoke about their startup business to a group of more than 200 people who gathered for the meeting at Virginia Commonwealth University's School of Business in downtown Richmond.

Part of the impetus for starting the vineyard was that Virginia's growing wine industry has sometimes suffered from a shortage of grapes, said Joynes, who is CEO of the business.

"We learned that with the increasing quality of Virginia wines and the increasing demand for Virginia wines ... we had a pretty significant deficit of supply against demand in Virginia for grapes," he said.

Virginia has about 280 wineries, up from less than 50 two decades ago, Joynes said. Virginia has about 4,000 acres of vineyards planted.

Valley Road Vineyards has started out with four types of wine grapes: Sauvignon Blanc; Petit Verdot; Chardonnay and Cabernet Franc.

Supplied with wine made for Valley Road Vineyards at another winery, the tasting room recently opened at the farm, which is along Route 151, a scenic road known for its numerous wineries and breweries.

The other partners in the venture are Linn Kreckman and Barbara Joynes; Bobby and Karen Edwards; Bruce and Janet Kay; and Jim and Mary Theobald.

Joynes joked that among the group, there are 16 undergraduate and graduate degrees, "not one of which" is related to grape production.

Kreckman and Joynes said their planted acreage isn't enough for a long-term sustainable business, so they are looking for additional land.

"It's a for-profit venture — make no mistake," Kreckman said before the presentation. "But it's an enjoyable way to spend time with some friends that we have known for a long time."
